Celestial Bluebeards with Hundreds of Wives-Love Letters and Courtship Unknown-Bigamy Case-An Interview with Mr. Hong Wing.

"A Chinese love letter! Have I any old fashioned Chinese love letters in my trunk? Have I a gilt edged Chinese billet-doux with a monogram like a crow's track? There was never a love letter written in Chinese. No Chinese maiden ever penned a billetdoux or sent a valentine."

Rather sadly was this said by a romantic young Chinaman, Mr. Hong Wing, who is noted among the Chinese for the skill with which he plays on the mandolin.

"In China," continued he, "a man never sees his wife until he is wedded to her for life, and sometimes he does not see her then, for she may refuse to remove her veil until three days have elapsed after the wedding. If he dosen't like her he cannot get a divorce, but he may marry another wife, and drough the blindfold lottery often enough to get one that suits him. Some of the Chinese Crosuses have hundreds of wives. There was an old bachelor who took it into his head to get married one winter, and he married 200 wives before he got through. one is the boss,"

"If a man never sees his wife before their wedding, how does he make love to her?" "He doesn't make love to her. His mother arranges the match, and his future mother-in-law makes love to him. It is a sour courtship. Children are formally engaged to other chlidren that they have never seen, at the tender age of 9 or 10, and after an engagement of 10 or 12 years they get married ' cousin?" "No; a marriage of cousins was never heard of in China. A man may no more marry his cousin in China than in England he may marry his deceased wife's sister. You talk about your old families here, and your oldest families are only five generations old. In China families are seventy-five and eighty norations old, and every member has a these generations. The remotest kinship children cannot marry."

"What are the most common families in your country?"

"The Chens, the Wongs, and the Lees. The Chens are the Smiths of China, the Wongs are do and the Lees are the Browns, A would marry a Miss Wong, but mis Chen. from falling in love with one another."

"Are the Chinese ladies cultivated?" and embroider. They never go out the street with their husbands. If a Chin so man and woman were to walk on the street arm in arm in their country as American men and women do, they would be mobbed. The women stay indoors. If they wish to visit their mothers they take conveyances. Sometimes they may be seen walking in the park with their chlidren."

"You are married" "Yes."

"To a Chinese lady!" "No; to an American. I came to this country when a boy 11 years old. Though I was 8,000 miles from China, my mother betrothed me to a little Chinese girl I had never seen. My mother used to write to me how small her feet were and how pretty she was, and what a beautiful cat-like nose she had. When I was 20 years old mother sent me a letter saying I was old enough to get married and must come back to China and narry the girl." "What did you think about is?" "I thought I was old enough, and so fell beels over queue in love with an American girl in Nevada and married her. We had our pictures taken, and I sent one to my mother, together with an account of the dding, which I translated from an Amerinewspaper into Chinese."

'What happened?" They use t stang in England. The, say a "funes jolly sid," but they laugh at an America says a thing is "just lovely." "Qui awfully mes" does duty in "The next thing I knew my uncle and four cousins came on to the United States and had me arrested for bigamy. I was taken before a court and tried. My uncle went on to the stand and swore that I had a wife in China." heard a frartist say, "That picture is a jolly bit aroscure." "Awfully jolly" is a facult ession. Yet the word gen-

"What did you think then?"

"I thought I was in a box, as you Americans say. The judge asked the witnesses how old I was when I left China. They replied that my mother had picked her out for me, and that in Chinese law was the same as marriage. The judge said that they didn't have any Chinese statutes in this country, and my uncle innocently replied that he would send to China for some. Everybody in the court laughed, and as I lived in the town ever since I came to America, all knew that I had left China a little boy, so the jury acquitted me. My uncle told the judge that he would be beheaded when he went back to China, which was a monstrous fib with which he intended to scare the judge. I have never been back to China, and suppose the little girl whom I never saw is a grass widow. Poor child!" -Brooklyn Citizen.

The wheat market has ruled active and, on the whole, higher to-day. The opening was tame and slightly lower on higher securities, and dull foreign markets. Until late in the session the market ruled dull and steady, when a report of an advance in foreign markets caused active buying, and the market sold up to 86‡ for May, and closing at 86‡. Receipts are still good and the outward movement comparatively small. The war feeling was not so intense to-day, and when this subsides we can see nothing to prevent a decline in price.
